Dorothy Dix's Advice

The other day a man whose marriage has degenerated into an endurance test for the sake of his children said that he would rather cut his tongue out than ask any sort of a favor from his wife.

"That is where you make a mistake," said a wise old woman friend to whom he had been telling his troubles. "You are throwing away the chance of saving your marriage from lasting failure by your false pride. Because your wife is self-centered, and selfish, and of her own volition shows you signs of the appreciation or consideration that are due you, you ask nothing of her."

"I understand and sympathize with how you feel. You have taken what you consider to be the only dignified attitude under the circumstances. But believe me, son, dignity has no place in the family circle. That is the place where the stoop-to-conquer stuff does its great and perfect work, and it is for you to stand aside, and grow morbid dwelling upon what your wife should do. The thing for you to do is to get busy and make her do what she ought to do."

"Your wife is like a lot of other women. She has an undeveloped matrimonial conscience. She has never really considered her duty to you nor what you have a right to expect of her. And that is mostly your fault because you have never thrown any responsibility on her. You have never demanded anything of her. You have never made her sacrifice anything for you. You have never made her feel, even, that she was absolutely necessary to you."

"Of course, you did all of this from the highest and noblest of motives. You wanted to be a good husband and to save your wife from every crumpled rose leaf under her forty mattresses of ease, and it seemed to you that such tenderness and chivalry must win an answering tenderness and consideration. It rarely does, son. Unselfishness needs selfishness. Gentleness seems to foster brutality in others. In all my long life I have not known more than one or two cases of an ideal husband, or wife, who didn't have a devil for a mate."

"In matrimony, as elsewhere, people treat you as you demand to be treated, and so if you stand aside and give, and give to your wife, and ask nothing of her, she will take it all without thanks, and without even realizing what a pig she is being."

"The way to do this is to force her to a fair divide. Make her sacrifice for you. Make her suffer for you. Make her feel her responsibility for your happiness. Make her feel that she is necessary for you. That will put you again on the map as a man, and she will get interested in you, and fall in love with you anew. For the more a woman does for a man, the more she loves him."

"You know that it is one of the elementary principles of human psychology that we hate the people to whom we are under obligations, but we love those on whom we have claims. The surest way to make a person dependent on you, and the quickest way to get fond of a person is to begin to help him or her."

"There is something in feeling that we are playing Providence to another that coddles our vanity glow when we think of him or her. More: the realization that some one needs us appeals to us more than anything else on earth."

"If it is in your mind to use all, it is doubly and trebly true of women. It persists in even the lowest of the sex and as long as there is a shred of womanhood left in one, you can arouse this instinctive desire to help those who need her and depend on her."

"It is this spirit that makes women stick to brute husbands who beat them, and mistreat them, and drag them down into the depths of poverty. If you have ever tried to get such a woman to leave a renegade husband you know that, nine times out of ten, she will refuse, saying: 'But what would he do without me?' He needs me! And that settles it. She would have to be dead in her coffin before she would be dead to that cry for help from the helpless."

"We often wonder why women who are married to good, strong, upright men, men who can stand on their own feet, turn quitters and renege their marriage vows more often than the women who have rotten and ne'er-do-wells and philanderers and loafers for husbands. The reason is that the woman knows that the strong man doesn't really need her, and that the weakling does."

"He dips into that inexhaustible fountain of maternal pity that makes a mother always love the black sheep among her children the best because he needs her most."

"It is universally conceded that no other men are as good and kind to women as are American men, and that the American husband is the paragon husband of the world, yet for all of that America holds the high divorce record."

"I often think that the reason for this is because American men ask too little of their wives. They monopolize the blessedness of giving in the family. They do all the suffering, and because they deny their wives a share in the toil and sweat that goes into the making of the home, the woman never really feels that she is a vital part of it. Her life blood hasn't gone into building it up, so she is careless about breaking it up as we are about the things that have not cost us much."

"No man makes a greater mistake than when he tries to save his wife from every hardship. It is on the battlefield that women, as well as men, find their souls. It is the stress of circumstance that calls out what is best and finest in a woman. It is only the women who know what it is to love something more than they do their own ease and who find a joy in sacrificing themselves for the good of another, who are really women. The balance are dolls."

"So, son, if your wife doesn't treat you as you want to be treated, don't give her up until you have at least tried to make her feel that you need her, that you need her love and her help. Ask for what you want. Teach her that truly it is more blessed to give than to receive."

"Don't wreck your life on pride and dumbness, as so many men and women do."

Achievement Boys and Girls Capital Guests

One hundred and fifty Maryland Achievement boys and girls, who are holding a club week at College Park, Md., visited Washington yesterday. They called on Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, went through the buildings of the department and took a trip down the river to Mount Vernon.

These boys have achieved in agriculture, tractor operation, and raising livestock. The girls in sewing, cooking and canning fruits and vegetables.

They are recognized because of what they have done by the University of Maryland. Dr. A. W. Neal, the superintendent of the Washington Boys' Club, is assisting in the program at College Park.

Raleigh Shawver, of Nuttallburg, and Stephen Martin, of Camden, Va., who have achieved in stock raising and gardening, are visitors to the College Park Achievement Club week.

Not a Fish Story.

Tommy went fishing the other day without his mother's permission. The next morning one of his chums met him and asked: "Did you catch anything yesterday, Tommy?"

"No, till I got home," was the sad response.

IRISH PONIES.

In the north of Ireland they have sturdy ponies, in size about 4 feet high. The hair on these Celtic ponies is more like that of the Angora goat than the ordinary horse. These ponies seem very comfortable and much at home in the most severe snowstorm.

As soon as the storm begins the ponies turn their hindquarters to it, and in a short time the snow has formed a kind of shield or disk upon the long hair growing around the root of the tail. Thus protected, the animals do not shift their position while the storm lasts, and they always turn with the wind.

A Judge Brown Story-Talk

A Brass Monkey.
By Judge Willis Brown

A tobacco dealer purchased a new sign. It was a brass monkey. It had wheels in its head and some kind of contrivance in its body.

The dealer placed a cigarette in the monkey's mouth. He then wound up the monkey. He placed it in his display window.

The brass monkey smoked. Of course this monkey could not think.

When it ran down the dealer simply wound it up again and it went on smoking and aping the men.

A great many people stopped and looked at the brass monkey smoking and wondered.

A boy stood looking at the brass monkey smoking. This boy was smoking. This boy was not born with an appetite for tobacco.

His first cigarette or cigar made him sick. But he wanted to ape the men, so he smoked.

Some of the other older boys who were smoking wound him up and started him in his puffing. He thought the brass monkey a queer sign.

A man came along and stood by the side of the boy and laughed. The boy looked up into the man's face and laughingly said: "It's funny to see a monkey smoke, isn't it?"

"Yes, very funny," replied the man. As they both watched, the dealer took the monkey out of the window.

The boy was curious to know why the monkey was taken away. He went inside, and found the dealer unscrewing the head and cleaning out the wheels and springs which made the monkey work.

"What's the matter with the monkey?" inquired the boy. "Oh, the smoke makes its wheels dirty and I have to clean 'em out or he won't work."

The man stood outside waiting for the boy. "Find out what's the matter?" asked the man.

"Yes, the monkey gets all clogged up smoking and has to have his inside machinery cleaned up," said the boy.

"Did you get them cleaned up all right?" asked the man. "I'm talking about the brass monkey," said the boy.

"Oh, I was laughing at and thinking about the boy monkey," laughingly replied the man as he walked on.

The boy threw away his cigarette and wondered how he could clean up his head, and if his inside machinery had been damaged.

Boys Slogan Is We Want Some Scrimmin' Holes

We want swimming holes! If 10,000,000 boys of the United States would adopt this cry as their one great demand perhaps they could save the lives of some of the 10,000 people who drown every year.

George H. Corson, of Toronto, Canada, is now in Washington giving exhibitions of swimming in the Municipal Tidal Basin.

Mr. Corson states that there is a loss of 10,000 lives each year because of inability to swim and of many others who simply have to watch people drown because they cannot swim.

Swimming should be as important as walking and all schools should have swimming pools and all cities swimming holes.

Mr. Corson said that educators were almost criminally liable for their neglect and indifference to swimming. All children should be taught to swim.

A New Name for Trousers.

Little Bobby—"Aunt Ida, what's an heirloom?"

Aunt Ida—"An heirloom, my dear, is something that has been handed down from father to son."

Little Bobby—"Huh, that's a queer name for my pants."

Emerson.

Like many great men, Emerson lived in a world of his own, a world of dreams and visions. As a result, he was often absent-minded. The following story is told of him:

One very hot day Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes was standing on the street corner in Boston, mopping his brow. He was holding his hat upside down in front of him.

Emerson came along the street and seeing an old man with his hat stretched out thus in front of him, he dropped a quarter in the hat and walked on down the street, never recognizing the great poet, his friend.

Boy Trains Toads.

William Watson, 12 years of age, of Richardson Park, Del., was working in his garden when he found two toads. He fed them. The next day they were there. William fed them again. Now they come when he whistles and eat out of his hand. William is training them to jump at command and perform other tricks which nothing but a toad can perform. He rewards them after each trick with a bug. So William is busy this year raising garden, catching bugs and training toads. William is very popular with all the boys of the neighborhood, and the other day he gave an exhibition with his toads before some parents who were interested.
